TRENTON, Feb. 4.—Morrisville Rotary Club celebrated its tenth anniversary last evening at the Y. W. C. A. Auditorium here in a joint meeting with the sponsor club, Bristol Rotary. Speaking in terms of internationalism Morris said, "It is not the flags of the different countries but the hearts of men of the world beating together that can bring international peace and good will. The international association of Rotary clubs at the present time represents a world-wide association of selected men who should present a bond for lasting peace and good will between nations."

Following the introduction of guests and visiting Rotarians the Morrisville president, Charles H. Boehm, presented a welcoming address. A memorial service was then conducted for those members of the Morrisville Club who died during the past year. Frank Volt, Bristol Club president, also spoke briefly.

the Board of Adjustment, in attendance, three property owners of Doylestown appeared Tuesday evening and presented reasons for a change in the zoning ordinance.

The petitioners include A. C. Eitman & Sons, Harrison Hibbard, Jr., and Harrison Hibbard, Sr., all of whom were present, and Paul Rohr. The petitioners own property in District F, which is now a first class residential district, on Maple avenue between East street and Swamp Road.

The petitioners, who own 88 per cent of the property in that district, desire District F changed to District E, which will make it a second class residential district.

The change will involve a building area increased from 20 per cent to 30 per cent.

The other property owner in District F is Howard Abbott, who owns the remaining 12 per cent of the property. Mr. Abbott, however, did not sign the petition.

This is the first instance that Borough Council has been petitioned for a change since the new zoning ordinance was adopted a few weeks ago.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

Another Faithful Threatened

Washington, Feb. 3. POLITICIANS are practical people; otherwise they would not be politicians. Or, at any rate, they would not remain in politics. It is therefore, natural that with the 1938 primaries not many months ahead political circles should be impressed with an interesting fact, to which attention has been called in this place before—and several examples given.

IT SIMPLY is this—the Democratic Senators who steadily supported Mr. Roosevelt in all his policies are in much greater danger of being "liquidated" than the

Sink British Ship

LONDON, Feb. 4.—Causing Great Britain to consider plans for a naval blockade of Majorca, two Spanish planes bombed and sank the 1387-ton British freighter Alcira off Barcelona today. The crew of 24 men and an officer appointed by the International Nonintervention Committee were saved by a Spanish fishing smack.

The Alcira flew the British flag and neutral emblem of the nonintervention patrol.

As a consequence of the disaster, members of the government and the high naval command discussed the possibility of sending a naval expeditionary force to blockade the island of Majorca in the Balearics.

The nationalistic submarine and airplanes, held responsible for the attacks, have been operating out of Palma, the Italian port of Majorca.

The man cut, Albert Paone, 23, Penn street, was treated for two cuts on the neck, a cut about the mouth and a gash on one hip.

According to Paone the cutting was done by Nick Furlione, 38, Dorrance street.

This information was contained in the report of George Craig, treasurer. All members were present, with president William Abel in the chair.

Report was also made that the entire school will be wired as a result of the recent robbery in which more than $100 was taken. Besides this amount the Board learned that the repairs to the safe which was forced will amount to well over another $100.

Mr. Meisinger, chairman of the transportation committee reported that his committee had gone over the new bus routes for transportation of school children. His report indicated that the new routes will speed up the system and make it generally more efficient.

Mr. Schreiber, chairman of building and grounds committee reported that all buildings were in good condition.

A report from the cafeteria committee, headed by Joseph Sharpe, Andalusia, indicated that the high school cafeteria is making a profit of about one dollar daily.

In his report for the teachers and courses committee Mr. Abel reported to the Board that sickness had caused several absences in the faculty in the past month. He also reported that the commercial law class made a trip to the county seat in Doylestown to sit in on one of the civil cases before the court. The trip was declared a complete success.

The activities report given by William Lange, chairman, indicated that the athletic teams of Bensalem High School have had a very fair percentage of wins this season. Lange reported that the wrestling team has taken four out of five wrestling matches this season. The basketball teams are likewise improved.

Superintendent of Schools, S. K. Faust, gave the nurses' and doctor's reports and these indicated that several cases of measles were reported in the Township. The report further indicated that the total enrollment of 1241 students have all had physical examinations.

"BUY AMERICAN" CLUB AGENT IS SPEAKER HERE

Says Buying American Will Help Solve Unemployment
Problem

Approximately 25 members of the Mill Street Business Men's Association met in regular monthly meeting at Ye Olde Delaware House here last evening to enjoy a dinner session and transact business. Raymond Beck, field secretary of the "Buy American" Club, was the guest speaker. Mr. R. Shiner, American Federation of Labor representative of the Retail Food Clerks' Association, also talked to the group.

Mr. Beck presented an interesting talk that was thoroughly enjoyed by the members present. In explaining the work of the "Buy American" Club, Beck said: "We believe in being pro-American and not anti-foreign."

With a consumer membership in the club of more than three million, Beck pointed out that the organization is fast becoming a vital factor in remedying some of the existing evil situations that have arisen in this country.

"One of our aims is to buy American products, instead of foreign products, especially where the products concerned are of a competitive nature," Beck stated.

"Because our imports have increased so materially, and since our exports have decreased in proportion it means that many articles that could be made here are being shipped in from abroad and thus our American labor is idle and the problems of unemployment are upon us."

"The reason we cannot compete with some of this foreign importation is because of the high American standard of living. Japanese labor, for example, receives about one-tenth of that received by American labor."

"Therefore when we import three billion dollars' worth of merchandise from abroad, two billion of which is of a competitive nature, it stands to reason that unemployment and consequent lack of purchasing power of the American buying public will result."

"We of the 'Buy American' Club ask that sufficient tariff be placed on this imported goods which has been made with cheap foreign labor, so that when it is placed on the shelves with similar products made in this country the prices will be approximately the same."

"Ninety-nine per cent of our American people have a preference for goods made at home, but often do not realize they are buying foreign-made goods. Their attitudes are changing, however, and our people are becoming 'buy American-made goods' conscious."

Following Beck's talk an open forum was held. Several members participated.

Mr. Shiner, American Federation of Labor representative, spoke briefly on the crusade being carried on by his organization to obtain the half day on Wednesdays for grocery clerks. He stated that the majority of stores in Philadelphia and surrounding territory close on Wednesday afternoon. Shiner also endorsed the early Saturday evening closing for the clerks who make long work-weeks. Another movement which is endorsed by Shiner's organization is the Sunday closing. "We are more concerned with the Wednesday half day at present, than with this latter policy, but we hope to have both policies in effect in the near future," Shiner concluded.

Edgar Spencer, president of the local business men's association, opened the business meeting last evening. Committee reports were heard including the one on membership, chairman of which is Abe Popkin. An intensive drive for new members for the organization is in progress and it is hoped that the organization will be able to double in size.

Marty Green, chairman of the publicity committee, gave a detailed report on activities of this committee and outlined briefly possible programs for the coming year. A co-operative sales campaign is planned and will occur in less than two weeks.

One new member, Joseph Waxman, was welcomed into membership last evening.

A VEGETABLE DIET

Department of Agriculture announcement that vegetable growing has achieved the status of a billion-dollar-a-year industry shows an important change in the American diet. The use of fresh vegetables has doubled since 1920, due to improved methods of shipping which make year round marketing practical. The ease with which vegetables can be obtained at all times has made city dwellers place more vegetables on their dinner tables.

Economically the shift in diet has had important effects. The average annual income from vegetables now exceeds that from cotton, grains or tobacco. None of those products has witnessed such an expanded use, and all are candidates for restrictive schemes to cure their surpluses. As a nation we are placing our emphasis on vegetables, rather than bread, as a staff of life.

Were manufacturers faced with such a change in demand they would soon shift production to meet it. The farmer in the Eastern States has taken appropriate measures, but by those in the one-crop areas of the South and West the trend has been resisted.

NO PANAY PENALTY

The United States will bill the Japanese imperial government for something between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 indemnity for the Panay. The indemnity is to be confined entirely to actual damage suffered in the sinking of the American gunboat, including the compensation for wounded sailors and civilians and the families of those whose lives were lost.

The navy department is compiling the "naval damages"—that is, the material loss caused by destruction of the boat and indemnity for killed and wounded navy personnel—and the state department is compiling the bill for personal indemnity of civilian victims of the Panay bombing. It is significant that no punitive indemnity is to be assessed.

That last factor not only offers Japan a bit of face-saving. It also makes it easier for Tokyo to pay, without question, any bill presented by the United States government for real damages. With the penalty left out, the problem of international indemnities is simplified by removal of the national pride hazard.

DO WOMEN LOOK ALIKE?

It is said that women look more and more alike each year. In former periods there were many women of an eccentric type who did not care if they looked different from the "common herd" as some called ordinary folk. They rather prided themselves on their unique appearance.

Today women folk, by our modern system of distributing goods, can buy the same styles in the remote country towns that are popular in the big city. Women study the same fashion magazines. They read the same hints on beauty culture. Their smart hands and artistic sense cleverly imitate the prevailing methods of improving their appearance.

There is no nation in the world whose women and girls can compare for charm with those of this land of the free. They are almost too tempting.

Women aren't the only bargain hunters. A man drops two bits on the collection plate and expects heaven to give him luck.

Washington has somewhat lessened the sufferings of Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, whose seat is threatened. But that is because Governor Chandler's effort to make a deal with the President involving a Federal judgeship was particularly stupid politics.

IT IS TRUE, too, that the President is openly for Senator Barkley. He cannot afford to be anything else. Senator Barkley is his official floor leader in the Senate. To lose him would be not only a blow to the Presidential prestige but would leave his Senate following in a state of demoralization. Information from Kentucky, however, is that the Presidential support by no means insures Senator Barkley's return, though that is expected. The Chandler machine is dominant in the party and unless Governor "Happy" weakens, "Dear Alben" will have to fight with everything he has. This, for a statesman who felt that when he had achieved the Senate leadership he would be unopposed in his State, is anything but pleasant.

POLITICIANS note such things carefully. In this situation they note, too, that the Presidential

CHAPTER XXVII

The offices of the International Insurance Company were miles away from her department-store upon the Avenue, but Ann intended sticking by the investigator so that the two of them might face the Claims Adjuster together. . . . tell the same story that would lift the stigma from her sister.

There was no time left that day to return to the store. Ann's interview in the Adjuster's office, in the Claims department of the insurance company took longer than expected. . . . not that time mattered when it came to the clearing of her sister's reputation. . . . devoted to her family as Ann was, she would have spent days and weeks, if necessary, in defense of the insantly reckless Claire.

Terrible as the incident had been, throwing a highlight on Claire's character and obvious lack of scruples, Ann realized that out of evil, a three-fold good would doubtless spring.

Claire's eyes had been abruptly opened to Carol Dittmar's falseness, to the knowledge that their friendship had been built upon the quicksands of a mutual liking for gambling, and that—lacking Ann's championing—Carol would have seen Claire go under without exerting herself to avert the disaster. Claire could never again regard Carol as a true friend.

Secondly, there was the exposure of Captain de Freyn. His trip with Claire to Atlantic City must, to Claire's eyes, put the final seal upon him of underhandedness, of complete lack of principle.

Thirdly—and most important, to Ann's mind—Claire's main awakening lay in her narrow escape from justice. By the barest margin had she avoided a trip to the district attorney. It would give her food for reflecting. . . . savor her back into the right path. Getting something for nothing had been a hobby of hers for a long time, but now it had been borne in upon her forcibly that straight dealings paid, and crooked ones didn't. The old-fashioned saws were right. You reap as you sow. She'd been caught in the whirlwind.

But once the strain was over in the Claims Department, and Ann's mission finished, and emerged into the clear, cold sunshine of the late March afternoon, her thoughts reverted happily to Paul Bradley, to his magic kisses in the taxicab that had swung them round the park in the moonlight of the wee, small hours of Sunday morning—less than two days ago, that was. And the most wonderful thing that had ever happened to her!

With sure, light steps she turned from Wall Street into Broad Street, the wide sweep of the Battery drawing her irresistibly.

Ships rode at anchor. Watercraft of all kinds skimmed over the waves. There was the tarry smell of shipping, the clean tang of a breeze blowing over salty water, giving one a sense of wanderlust, of adventuring to far countries. Ann sat care behind her, sniffing the ozone, her skirt whipping about her ankles as the wind eddied about her. It was gloriously stimulating.

Over and over she repeated to herself Paul's words on that never-to-be-forgotten ride.

"I'm afraid I'm falling in love with you, Ann," he had whispered, kissing her—and then he'd kissed her again. . . . and again.

She hadn't resisted. With every pulse hammering in a divine ecstasy, she had yielded to the glory and wonder of his arms, his kisses. "It's amazing, but it's true! He means it!" her heart sang in her breast.

Words seemed superfluous between them. This physical urge for closeness, this breaking down of barriers between them, spoke volumes. Hadn't she dreamed of it for months past?

Finally, it was he who had drawn back. But not for an instant had he taken his eyes from her as she sat beside him in a sweet dream. Then it had begun over again—his tenderness, his kisses. She could have swooned from the sheer rapture of it.

Impossible to connect him with the stern, businesslike executive she had first known! The streak of hardness, of scepticism in him gleamed from the difficult places in life, had vanished. He was delicate, tender, the ideal lover, finding her utterly desirable and lovely, his every caress telling her so.

He was her man.

How well he had hidden his feeling for her during the long Winter months at the store! But Spring was coming. Spring with Paul in Paris, enchanted city? Already, down by the Battery, there was the faintest blurring of the trees in the public square, as if a brush dipped in green paint had been gently brushed on the branches—more promise than reality—a vague, voracious budding.

Life was like that. The waiting. The hope. After long season, the sap stirring, rising. Then the budding. More waiting. The flowering.

Love was like that! thought Ann. "Afraid you're falling in love?" she had whispered to Paul in the taxi, "Am I so terrible?"

What he had said had sent the blood in delicious waves to her ten fingers, her ten toes.

"Then you aren't afraid! You're happy!"

"Are you happy, Ann?" No need for words. She had turned her pretty face to him, as a sunflower towards the sun, and he had kissed her as though nothing in the world could ever separate them.

Came the eternal woman's question: "Why do you love me, Paul? I want to hear."

"For something more than the allure of you—something above and beyond physical attraction, important and necessary as that is," had come his earnest answer.

"Do you know so very much about me?" she had ventured happily, in the haven of his arms.

His dark eyes were very tender as he told her that he loved her for the courage in shouldering family burdens—Rosalind had told him all about it during the course of the evening, and before that, her grandfather, old Tom Bradley, had enlightened him.

For her standards of conduct, too, he loved her, that innate delicacy and refinement that was Ann. For her loyalty to her job, for the capacity she had of never tattling, of soft-peddling or overlooking the defects of her fellow-workers, even when they were catty to her, and sought to harm her, through jealousy. She was above such pettiness. From his own observation he had seen it, and (though he did not tell her), he'd had a long talk with Rosalind, and Rosalind had corroborated it, and Rosalind had assured him that it was Ann who had weaned her away from drinking.

For her dignity, too, he loved her. For her sweetness of nature that had been severely tested. For the sheer femininity of the young girl that was Ann.

"Brains and beauty are a wonderful combination," he had told her in the taxi, "but there are still better things, and you have got them, dear."

Would he ask her to marry him? Of course, if he really loved her, he would!

"Are you happy, Ann?"

There was a strain of the old-fashioned in Paul Bradley. Ann had seen it. He would want to meet her parents, visit her home, do things conventionally. He was no Freddie Brandon, no Captain de Freyn.

He would want to claim her proudly, before everybody. It would all be above-board, and clear sailing. She trusted him.

But they could not ride forever in Central Park. Dawn started to streak the sky over towards the East River.

On the doorstep of the brownstone house which was her home, he gave her a quick handclasp. The taxi waited.

"You've been so sweet to me tonight, my dear. I shall never forget it."

Somehow the words had struck her with a faint, foreboding chill. "You don't know how I've appreciated everything. It has been a happy evening?" he asked her.

Happy?

What an inadequate word to describe an emotion—a whole gamut of emotions—that were like sunlit waves of the ocean, wafting her to the Isles of the Blest!

Why, she had never lived until this glorious evening! She'd been like a poor little chrysalis imprisoned—not realizing the wonder and the glory waiting for her—with Paul Bradley.

"And one of these evenings, we'll have to do it again."

It confused her, dashed her. She longed to hear him say: "Tomorrow I'll telephone you. Maybe we could go to church together?"—or—"Maybe we could take a long walk in the Park?" The almond-blossoms were just breaking into bloom up by the bridge-path where Ann had used to ride on horseback, Sunday mornings. Would it be unconsciously bold to ask him? Dare she?

But she was sensitive. "We'll have to do it again one evening," he repeated, and looked up at the windows of the house as though to remind her of the lateness of their return.

She was ashamed of the longing that caught her to be in his arms, just for a farewell moment, feel his warm kiss on her mouth, hear him ask her for a definite appointment.

None of these things happened. With a second handclasp—quick, conventional—he bade her good-night, walked down the steps to the waiting taxicab.

Ann was the first of her staff to arrive in her department on Wednesday morning. She was to have a window display.

That meant Rameses, the clever dresser, putting his best foot foremost, and Ann wanted to be in on it, seeing that everything was perfect, before the great shade on the window was rolled up.

She revelled in the lingerie department with its garments like exotic flowers.

But a tiny frown puckered her brow as her gaze lit on the consignement of underwear that was not selling. Would it have to be marked down?

Like a housewife, she had her buying allowance from the merchandise-manager, Paul Bradley. If she could not dispose of the goods, it would be her first humiliation since promotion. Yet the manufacturer had assured her of the excellent value of the goods, and her own knowledge of silks had corroborated it. Besides, whatever his failings, Tim O'Hallahan was honest in his business dealings.

What about peeping up her sales-girls by offering them a small commission on this merchandise, since she did not care to make a "mark-down"?

Putting it out of her mind for a moment, she went into the Negligee Salon.

Someone was there. A man, among the boudoir robes, the charming lounging pajamas and frail undies—looking huge and rather helpless in this hot-house of femininity, with its gilded chairs and sofas, its pink velvet carpet, its window draped with blue and rose and golden tassels, in the Du Barry style.

Ann blinked, halted. It was Paul Bradley, the merchandise-manager, rising from a rose velvet couch, coming towards her.

Waves of lovely color swept into her face.

He had come here for a quick, stolen meeting? The faint aroma of the dainty garments all about them gave an added touch of femininity. Quiet, secluded, perfumed, wasn't it an ideal setting for a kiss. . . . ?

"Good morning. This is an early meeting," smiled Ann.

But there was no smile on the lips of the merchandise-manager. His mouth looked tense as, for a moment, he stared at her silently. Was he regretting the taxi ride in the early hours of Sunday morning? Already, in sane and sober mood, was he regarding it as an indiscretion?

What did she really know about him? Perhaps after a party it was his habit to make love to pretty girls? They'd all drunk plenty of champagne at Il Rococo. Perhaps he only regarded the aftermath as an incident? Had she cheapened herself? She couldn't bear it if he thought so.

support extended to the leader is not being extended to others equally loyal and in even more trouble. Senator Dieterich, of Illinois, for example, has been chucked overboard by the Kelly-Nash machine without so much as a White House wave of the hand. Nor is there any suggestion that Administration help will be given Senator F. Ryan Duffy, of Wisconsin, who in six years has not once wavered in his support. Indeed, the Duffy loyalty has been such that it is difficult to see how the Administration can fail to be embarrassed.

YET, the White House relations with the La Follette brothers are such that no one thinks Senator Duffy has any chance of returning. He will have the support of the Democratic State Committee, but that is a shadowy party remnant which has had no national political support and almost no Federal patronage. The Federal jobs and the Federal funds have gone largely to the La Follette Progressives. It is their State. They carried Wisconsin for Mr. Roosevelt in 1932 and 1936. The alliance is clear, concrete, open. The Progressives want the Duffy seat for a Progressive. It is possible Gov. Philip La Follette may decide to run for the Senate or, if he does not, then some other Progressive will.

THE NAME of Gerald Boileau, now in the House, is mentioned; also that of Mr. Dan Hoan, the Socialist Mayor of Milwaukee. From time to time, Governor La Follette has been suggested as likely to succeed Attorney General Cummings in the Roosevelt Cabinet. Close to the President, he is a strong, vibrant, attractive figure who would become an outstanding member of the Administration if he entered it, though at this late date, that he would care to do so is unlikely. In any event, Senator Duffy, with his six-year record of complete support, is in a peck of trouble. He can get—if he wants it—the Democratic nomination, but no one thinks he will have Presidential support in the general election against a La Follette or a La Follette man. And without that he is sunk. When this, and the cases of other New Deal Senators to come up this year, are considered, it is not surprising the politicians should be impressed; nor that the menaced candidates are not greatly comforted by the assurance that this is just a "family fight," and, anyhow, a Republican will not win.

BENSALEM JR. VARSITY GOES DOWN TO DEFEAT

By Louis Tomlinson

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 4—In the preliminary tilt, Bensalem's Junior Varsity outfit also went down to defeat at the hands of Fallington's J. V. quintet to the tune of 15-12 in a slower but much closer tilt. Bensalem could tally only one point in the first period to four for the home team; and by half-time, Fallington led, 13-5. But in the third canto, the Orange and Black went scoreless, and yet Bensalem failed to take advantage of that for they could score only two points. However, they cut down the lead in the last period by outscoring Mike DiRisi's aggregation, 5-2, but it just wasn't enough to win.

Harry Kelly led Bensalem's scoring attack with two field goals and a single foul toss for five counters. Gene Snyder, with four points was a close second for the Owls scoring honors. For the winners, Walt Anderson was the main cog in the scoring machine, counting a pair of double deckers and a quartet of foul shots for eight tallies.

FALLINGTON EASILY DEFEATS BENSALEM

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 4—Stepping out to an early lead and increasing it rapidly as the game progressed, Coach Jimmy Doheny's Fallington quintet easily swept aside Bensalem's Owls in their tilt at the Junior High No. 4 court last night. Of course the fray was a Lower Bucks County League affair and the victory by Falls enabled them to remain in the running for the title despite the fact that their chances at the present time are very slim. The final count of the contest was, Fallington, 17; Bensalem, 21.

The Owls were away off form again as they failed to penetrate the Orange and Black defense and their shooting was much poorer than they have displayed lately. Only seven double deckers hooped the cords for the Owls who also counted a like number of foul tosses to account for their 21 points. On the other hand, Fallington played inspired ball, in outplaying their rivals all the way on both the defense as well as the offense. Clicking in that manner, Bensalem found it hard to stop the Fallington offensive attack once it began rolling.

The Tremendous Tony

By BURNLEY

One of the most colorful characters on the modern sports scene is the gorilla-like Tony Galento, the battling bartender of New Jersey. The gargantuan Galento, who is as broad as he is tall and is built along the general lines of a beer-keg, seems to be a throwback to the gusty days of John L. Sullivan. He disregards all the rules of training, guzzling vast quantities of lager behind the bar of his own saloon, and like John L., is never resistant about boasting of his fistie prowess.

This elemental brawler is handicapped by the etiquette of the prize ring, being at his best in rough and tumble battles. Two-Ton Tony is the bouncer for his own joint, and you may be sure that the customers stay on their good behavior after getting a peek at the Neanderthalish Nightstick of New Jersey.

With no holds barred and no referee to cramp his highly effective style, it seems pretty certain that this ruffian could tear Joe Louis or any of his heavyweight cohorts into finely chopped hamburger. With leather mittens on his ham-like fists, and a referee to reprimand with him when he starts to heel or gouge his foe, Tony is practically hand-cuffed. He can belt like blazes, but often finds difficulty in locating a rapidly moving target.

Still, Tony's one ambition is to get Joe Louis in the ring with him. Even with gloves on, Galento might inflict serious damage if he connected on the Bomber's fragile chin.

Exchange Club Speaker Tells of Rubber Tires

Members of the Bristol Exchange Club met at the Elks' home last evening to listen to an interesting talk by Russell Shaw, representative of the United States Rubber Company, who gave a talk illustrated with moving and sound pictures on "Safety of Automobile Transportation."

Mr. Shaw gave an interesting talk on the methods employed by his company in their search for improvements on tires. The speaker told of the research work that is constantly carried on to achieve this end. He pointed out that a very large percentage of the accidents involving automobiles is not caused by breakage in sidewalls or blowouts, but because of the inability to stop quickly enough. As a remedy for this situation, Shaw stated that his firm is experimenting with types of grips for quick stopping, some of these grips having already been well developed.

The meeting next week will be held at the Elks' home and the Newtown Exchange Club will be the guest of the local club. More than 20 members are expected to be present next week from Newtown when a special program will be presented.

WHAT A "TURFIPAL" WORD!

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M. (INS)—An extension of the English language to include an antonym for "beautify" was suggested recently by Dr. F. M. Mitchell, head of the Latin department at the University of New Mexico, here.

The word, Dr. Mitchell said, would be "turfiply" taken from the Latin. The noun would be "turfification."
